"The authors' intellectual virtuosity is admirable. At once theoretical and practical, empirical and normative, the book scrutinizes conceptions of justice from the rise of Islam to the present, explains how/why injustice pervades the Muslim world today, and offers a way out." Dariush Zahedi, Director, AMENA Center for Entrepreneurship and Development, UC Berkeley

"A must-read primer for anyone who wants a solid understanding of the changing concepts of Justice from the from the birth of Islam to the present day. Their clear, objective assessment will set the standard for years to come." Robert Looney, Distinguished Professor, Naval Postgraduate School

"With globalization, our greatest opportunity to find commonality and comity instead of conflict is forging a shared understanding of what economic and social justice means with those who do not talk, dress or look like us. Conceptions of Justice provides us an essential primer to spark that dialogue." John Forrer, Research Professor, George Washington University

"This is an altogether admirable work of synthesis as well as an exploration into an area of immense significance that has exercised Muslim minds over the centuries." Ali Allawi, author three highly acclaimed books—The Crisis of Islamic Civilization, The Occupation of Iraq, and Faisal of Iraq
